FP: Creative Exploration

These two images came about as an inspiration of what religions I learned about in the process of interviewing different individuals. Both images were made using a Wacom drawing tablet and Krita, a free drawing software. I wanted to incorporate my own personal art rather than using photographs, which is what I've been doing for the majority of the semester. I also wanted to keep it simple while still getting the point across of there being three distinct religions involved in the interviews. The first image is something I drew for my interview with Stacy, as she was Christian. While drawing an individual image for each interview would be interesting, I thought having one background for all the pages would keep them streamlined and less distracting - hence the second drawing.
